DRINKING WATER DIRECTIVE

APE welcomed the new Drinking Water Directive for its combination of:

- a rigorous approach to water quality;
- the emphasis on ensuring access for all;
- the push towards a more integrated approach to water resources management, in particular the need for an upstream monitoring and protection of water resources.

- NBS can be cost-efficient and long-term solutions to different water-related problems
- However, these solutions require coordination between different actors

Water operators can contribute to our energy security in cooperation with other stakeholders and public authorities

Ensuring an equitable distribution of the costs of some of the needed interventions, with for example the 'Extended Producers Responsibility'

| FOR A WATER UNION

We need to adopt a holistic view of water resources management:

- Clear responsibilities for water operators
- Inclusive and participatory process to develop informed decisions (especially at river-basin scale...)
- Political involvement
